RIPARIAN AREA means the area located between the water's edge of aquatic ecosystems (rivers, streams, lakes, ponds, springs and seeps) and upland areas, whose soils allow for or tolerate a high water table and provide sufficient moisture in excess of that otherwise available locally so as to provide a more moist habitat than that of contiguous floodplains and uplands. Riparian areas are composed of interacting assemblages of plants, animals and aquatic communities whose presence is either directly or indirectly attributed to water-influenced or water-related factors. Riparian areas produce a diversity of vegetative forms, sizes and species and a density of vegetation that makes them among the most productive habitats for wildlife. Areas exempt from this definition are manmade agricultural structures and devices such as irrigation ditches, sprinklers, and artificial ponds.

These areas generally occur in low sage brush canopy areas where the sage grouse traditionally display, breed, nest, hatch and nurture their young. These areas also include healthy stands of forbs, grasses, and denser sagebrush used for nesting and cover.
