CASE DEFINITIONS

A confirmed case of COVID-19 is one that is laboratory confirmed in a clinical specimen using a molecular test, such as a PCR test.

A probable case of COVID-19 is one that is not laboratory confirmed by PCR, but may meet case definition through a combination of symptoms, exposure history, and other lab tests. The purpose of a probable case definition is to identify cases that may not be able to receive a confirmatory test. This may be due to their isolation status or because they have mild symptoms that do not require a healthcare visit. Both confirmed and probable cases are considered cases and are included in total counts.

A Pending case of COVID-19 is one that has not yet been investigated by DSHS. When DSHS receives a lab result, the result goes through a review. DSHS must determine if the result meets the case definition and they must verify the address (if it is known). DSHS, or their designee, contacts the individual to complete the case investigation. DSHS notifies the county of the case only when the investigation is complete.
